Those in power know this - the Romans used bread and circuses, modern socialist states use welfare benefits etc. It's important that we don't see ourselves as victims, set our boundaries and stand up for ourselves and others (in a peaceful, non violent way), even if it means that we have to forego some material goodies or so-called privileges being dangled by powers that be. At the end of ...

There seems to be a touching belief among certain Ph.D.'s in sociology that Ph.D.'s in sociology will never be corrupted by power. Like Sir Galahad's, their strength is as the strength of ten because their hearts are pure -- and their heart is pure because they are scientists and have taken six thousand hours of social studies. Alas, higher education is not necessarily a guarantee of higher ...
